The town of Benijófar is located on Spain's southeast coast, just 10 minutes from the white sand beaches of Guardamar and close to the Sierra de Orihuela, a region known as the Lower Segura River Valley. The area's surroundings include traditional agricultural land and beautiful natural landscapes, making it one of the province's representative towns, a gem of the Costa Blanca. In fact, the name Benijofar comes from the Arabic word "son of pearl," making Benijofar a true pearl of the Costa Blanca.

This large/small town in the south of Alicante province has 4,200 inhabitants and is only 5 miles from the Guardamar beaches. Its residents, although many are Nordic, are very active in the city's daily life, mingling in the narrow streets of the old part of the city and enjoying the relaxed life of the Mediterranean.
